

Introduction of Eleanor Bingham Miller

Eleanor Bingham Miller grew up in Louisville, went away to Boston for High School. She then went to North Carolina and then onto England for college. She has traveled most of her life and has used Kentucky as her base since 1978.

For much of her adult life she has been involved in television and film projects. Working in Los Angeles and New York on documentaries for PBS and other local channels. When she moved back to Louisville, she contributed to her family-owned CBS affiliate, WHAS-TV, through new programming, new technologies and the creation of “Louisville Tonight Live”, which aired from 1978-1984.

She served as the President of Cumberland Gap Productions, Inc from 1980-2013 and was a partner in Skinner & Company, Inc. She provided funding and creative assistance with many films and documentaries.

Since 2011 she has focused on land conservation, sustainable agricultural practices and environmentally sensitive land-use planning at her farm here in Oldham County and at her ranch in Tucson, Arizona. She is also interested in finding ways to provide healthy food access for everyone as well as supporting small farms.

Eleanor serves on the Board for Fons Vitae Publishing Company, in Louisville. She is a member of the Louisville Chapter of Showing Up for Racial Justice (SURJ) and supports the Center for Rural Strategies in Whitesburg, KY.

She looks forward to taking a trip along the Underground Railroad with the Oldham County History Center and Dr. Nancy Theiss when our country balances itself and we can safely be together in person once again.
