

Introduction of Jameson Cable

Jameson Cable grew up in Rockcastle County, Kentucky where his family has lived for generations. Growing up in a small town has its advantages and disadvantages. During his college years, he lived in Lexington and Richmond and got a taste of the “Big City Life”. After graduating from college at Eastern Kentucky University, he became a full-time teacher at Crab Orchard Elementary and moved to Lincoln County where he currently lives, about 5 miles from his childhood home. He has been teaching 5th grade for 8 years now.

Over the years he had many interests but one that has stayed steady is his interest in History. He can remember when he was young and his mother took he and his brothers to Fort Boonsboro and Fort Harrod. His love for history began on those outings. Now he is a lifelong student of history and tries to read as much as he can. He really enjoys history focused on Kentucky.

His love for Kentucky History took him in an unexpected direction. His former colleague and mentor, Mr. James Pope shared many stories about history that captivated him and lead them to create the Kentucky History Podcast. Their show focuses on all parts of Kentucky and hopefully a new discovery about Kentucky for their listeners.

He would like for people to investigate the Logan’s Fort Foundation. Fort Logan was a fort in Stanford, Kentucky which had never been rebuilt. The Logan’s Fort Foundation is currently rebuilding it and have about ½ of the fort rebuilt. More information can be found on Facebook at Logan’s Fort Foundation.

He would like to share his podcast, The Land Between the Meadows: Kentucky History Podcast, where Mr. Pope and he discuss historical figures, events, and topics about Kentucky. It is available on Apple Podcase, Google Podcast and Spotify. He also has a YouTube channel called the Kentucky History Channel, where he makes short videos about historic people from Kentucky. You can connect to him on Facebook, Twitter (@kyhistorypod) or email thelandbetweenthemeadows@gmail.com.

Reading in this podcast sparked an interest for him. People are often unaware of the history around them. The importance of Kentucky to the Underground Railroad can not be overlooked. It was the last obstacle to overcome, the last river to cross, the last town to sneak into, the last leg to freedom. So, upon learning about this project, he said “Yes” without hesitation.
