

Introduction of Jeannine Kreinbrink

Jeannine Kreinbrink is the President and Senior Partner and K & V Cultural Resources Management, LLC, which she co-founded in 2011 with Doug VonStrohe. She has a combined a career in cultural resource management with conducting educational and public programs in archaeology, preservation, and history. Her archaeology career began at Northern Kentucky University and in volunteering at BCM, at which she has been an Associate Archaeologist since 1981. She began a full-time career as an archaeologist in 1986 working on urban archaeology in Covington. Jeannine obtained her master's degree in 1992 from the University of Cincinnati.

Jeannine helped found and has served on the Board of the James A. Ramage Civil War Museum since its opening in 2005. She serves on the Board of Directors for the Friends of Bog Bone. For many years, Jeannine also taught as an adjunct Professor to the Anthropology and History Departments at Northern Kentucky University from 1997-2014.

Jeannine and Doug have worked with the Oldham County History Center on the Henry Bibb archaeological project since August 2005. They supervise public archaeology digs, field schools and artifact washing workshops at the Tribble County Bibb / Gatewood site near Bedford.

Born and raised in Kenton County, Kentucky, Jeannine, and her husband Anthony have lived in South Carolina and Ohio. They build an earth-sheltered house in Boone County in 1994 and have lived there since then. Their daughter and her family live in Austin, Texas.
