

Madison, Indiana and the Shallows

Description: Placed at an unusual section of the Ohio River, where shallow crossings were common, Madison became a point of flight for freedom seekers, who could disappear in the Black neighborhood of the Georgetown District. The Neil's Creek Anti-Slavery Society created a group of resisters who created the Eleutherian College as a place of haven for Black and White students.